Computers are widely used in education, and some people think (teacher) teachers will not play an important role in the classroom. To what extent do you agree or disagree?

With the development of technology, electronic devices, and especially computers are being widely used in education. Some people doubt that teachers will (1not) be as important as they were before.

1. Avoid using NOT in writing;

This is partly because many students can take courses online rather than go to school and sit in the classroom. Without teachers' guidance, they can also gain knowledge on (the) websites, which is very convenient. For example, if someone got1 (get) injured, it would be much more difficult for him or her/them to go to school with a damaged/injured (limb) leg. So/In that case, (However,) an online course would be a better option. Even though the student (he) could not raise questions face-to-face, he could still get answers from the teacher online. Therefore, it seems that traditional teaching and teachers are not as important as before.

1. Subjunctive voice;

In spite of this, there are obvious benefits to having / of teachers in the classroom. For one thing, in addition to/beyond (except) imparting knowledge, teachers at school can take care of students' mental health. As they are in close contact with friends every day, teachers can pay attention to what children think, and they can also give some practical advice about/on their growth in all aspects.

For another, online teachers cannot teach students face-to-face. As a result, they cannot supervise students properly. When some students are too lazy to finish their homework, their online teacher may not know that. Consequently, in the long term, some students may not finish their homework on time resulting in (and get) terrible academic performance.

In (To reach the) conclusion, although online learning/ (on) computer learning/learning on a computer benefits people a lot, it should (would) not/could not/cannot/never will replace traditional teachers in the classroom.
